“QUOTE, UNQUOTE”

Quote, unquote is an eclectic sampling of things said at and about Hope College.

Dr. Virginia Beard of the Hope faculty is dedicated to helping students make the most of their education, and as a long-distance runner who has participated in multiple marathons she is no stranger to the demands and benefits of hard work and perseverance.

Her commitment and experiences shaped her advice for the members of the incoming Class of 2019 during the college's opening convocation on Sunday, Aug. 30, setting the pace for the college years to come—and beyond. The event, held in the Richard and Helen DeVos Fieldhouse, marked the formal beginning of the college's 154th academic year.

Dr. Beard, an associate professor of political science and director of the Women's and Gender Studies program, encouraged the students to be purposeful in how they approach all of the choices and challenges they will encounter not only in college but in all of life. She titled her remarks “Living a ‘Wild Life’: Attention and Intentionality,” phrasing derived from Mary Oliver's poem “The Summer Day,” which asks the reader, “[W]hat is it you plan to do with your one wild and precious life?”

“In contrast to going through the motions without much forethought, what if we lived our lives full of attention and intentionality?” Dr. Beard asked. “Everything we do would then be done with an acute consciousness, fulfilling the core values that we find most essential (such as empathy, self-awareness, curiosity and responsibility—values around which Hope College has geared courses and co-curricular activities so that you leave this place in four or so years more deeply formed in these values). What if life was built on a type of paying attention that ensures we do not waste the ‘one wild life’ we are given?”

As the students make their journeys, she advised that they concern themselves with the truly important; to pursue truth; to be curious; to be grateful; to be honest and walk in humility; to know themselves, including their strengths and weaknesses; to live in grace with themselves and others; and to work hard—sometimes even with a marathon effort.

“Somewhere between miles 18-21, a marathon starts to feel REALLY difficult,” Dr. Beard said. “Your body is tired, and your mind starts to play with your heart. The race becomes really, really hard work—mentally, emotionally and physically. I have heard it said that a marathon has two halves—the first 20 miles, and the last six.”

“Your college journey as well as the rest of your life will have such times of hard work, that last six miles,” she said. “Maybe it will be the next few weeks as you adjust to being away from home, learn to interact with classmates or hallmates from different cultures, develop new study skills to succeed at the higher level of academic rigor offered by college, figure out how to juggle the demands of being first a full-time student with your other activities, jobs and friends, or push through to the finish line that is exam week.”

As she has experienced in running, she also noted that it is important—and rewarding—to persevere, even if the results aren't what was first envisioned.

“Sometimes you push through to the outcome you set out to attain, and other times you have to turn another direction,” Dr. Beard said. “Perhaps for you hard experiences will lead you to new paths in your major midway through your college career, or seeking out new activities when the sport you are playing no longer fits your goals or investing in new friendships or activities in your second, third or even fourth year at Hope because you are carefully and attentively choosing to engage with the people and experiences that fit your goals and calling.”

Season of Hope.

Suddenly a great company of the heavenly host appeared with the angel, praising God and saying, “Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace to those on whom his favor rests.” – Luke 2:13-14

On the campus of Hope College, Christmas is a time of peaceful, quiet beauty. Yet we are reminded daily of the hurt, anxiety and turmoil experienced by millions throughout the world. This reality reminds us of the ever-growing importance of Hope's mission: To educate students for lives of leadership and service in a global society through academic and co-curricular programs of recognized excellence in the liberal arts and in the context of the historic Christian faith.

This season, let us not lose sight of our many reasons to be joyful, for Christ's birth offers hope to the whole world. Thousands of our own alumni, faculty and students serve as agents of hope around the globe and in every field endeavor. It is our prayer that God will continue to use the worldwide family of Hope College to heal wounds, model reconciliation and unite isolated hearts and minds.

Whether you are next door or thousands of miles away, we wish you a quiet heart this Christmas, secure in the unchanging love of our Savior.

STRONG ENROLLMENT:

A successful recruiting year and strong retention again have Hope operating with full enrollment.

The college has 3,407 students this year, the second year in a row that enrollment has topped 3,400. Last year's headcount was 3,433.

"We're grateful for the continued strong interest among students in the outstanding education that Hope provides," said William Vanderbilt '88, vice president for admissions. "We had a record number of applications this year and achieved our enrollment goal for both the incoming class and the student body as a whole."

AAAS FELLOW: Dr. David Myers of the psychology faculty has been elected a Fellow of the prestigious American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The honor is bestowed upon AAAS members by their peers because of their scientifically or socially distinguished efforts to advance science or its applications. Dr. Myers was chosen for distinguished contributions to the field of social psychology and communication of psychological science to students and the public.

A total of 347 AAAS members have been elected Fellows this year, and Dr. Myers is one of only three from undergraduate colleges and only eight in psychology. Most Fellows are from institutions such as national or private research laboratories, scientific associations and comprehensive universities.

A social psychologist who has been a member of the Hope faculty since 1967, Dr. Myers has digested psychological research for the public through 17 books, and articles in four dozen magazines and three dozen academic periodicals.

TEACHER-SCHOLAR:

Dr. Jeff Johnson of the chemistry faculty has received national recognition through a 2015 Henry Dreyfus Teacher-Scholar Award from the Camille and Henry Dreyfus Foundation, one of only seven presented nationally.

It is the second year in a row that a Hope professor has received the award, which recognizes faculty in the chemical sciences at undergraduate institutions based on accomplishment in scholarly research with undergraduates as well as a compelling commitment to teaching. Dr. Jason G. Gillmore was honored last year.

GUIDANCE: Fall is not only the season of school years new, but of college guides, some well known and some new, some considering institutions in toto and some targeted in focus.

And a lot of them praise Hope, with acclaim running across a broad spectrum ranging from the U.S. News Best Colleges Guide (again among the nation's top 100 liberal arts colleges and recognized for student engagement in research and creative work), to onlinechristiancolleges.com (recognition as one of the 50 most beautiful Christian colleges in the U.S.), to the 2016 Fiske Guide to Colleges, which features this reflection from a student:

"Hope is a place where students are challenged to become better students... but, more important, better people."

REMARKABLE RELAY:

Hope's student-organized November 2014 Relay For Life received three awards through the 2015 American Cancer Society Relay For Life Nationwide Awards and Recognition Program.

The program received a Nationwide Per Capita Award based on net overall funds raised and a Lakeshore Division Heart of Relay Award for Survivor Engagement, and Mortar Board received a Nationwide Team of Excellence Award as a top fund-raising organization.

A 13-year tradition, the Hope Relay continued this year on Friday-Saturday, Nov. 13-14, and raised $65,687.

Flourishing for Fifty

Hope and Meiji Gakuin celebrate their first half century By Greg Olgers '87

In the summer of 1968, Hope and Meiji Gakuin University of Japan planted a young cherry tree on the north side of Lubbers Hall in commemoration of their budding friendship, then just three years old.

In 2015, that tree is a spectacular part of campus, blooming with breathtaking beauty each spring and not only a reminder of the relationship but a symbol of its vitality as the two schools celebrate their 50 years of partnership. Just as the tree has matured and flourished, so, too, has the relationship grown from an initial summer program for Meiji Gakuin students to a mix of opportunities across the year for students and faculty at both institutions, the program enduringly rooted in the positive experience of hundreds of students across generations, the friendships formed among faculty and staff, and a mutual commitment to building understanding in an increasingly shrinking world.

“We’re extremely grateful for our relationship with Meiji Gakuin University,” said President Dr. John C. Knapp. “Today, many see the importance of fostering international awareness as an essential component of an outstanding college education, but 50 years ago the idea was much less common. That our friends at Meiji Gakuin and our forerunners here at Hope made it a priority and have nurtured the relationship across all the years since has left us a gift that we treasure.”

While each institution now has a variety of international partnerships (and Hope’s Vienna Summer School began in 1956), the Hope-Meiji Gakuin exchange is the longest-running such association at each.

“Meiji Gakuin has relationships with 37 different schools all over the world. However, for us at Meiji Gakuin, the relationship with Hope is of the utmost importance to us,” said Hiroyoshi Udonon, president of Meiji Gakuin, who led a delegation from Japan to Hope for a two-day celebration of the anniversary in November. “I hope and pray that God will continue to bless our relationship so that we can continue to flourish together as part of the body of Christ.”

The Nov. 3-4 anniversary events at Hope included a ceremony during which Presidents Udonon and Knapp signed a formal institutional agreement as a pledge to continue their relationship that was followed by the planting of a Kwanzan cherry tree at the Martha Miller Center for Global Communication. Additional events included a commemorative Chapel celebration with Presidents Udonon and Knapp speaking, and lectures by Andy Nakajima, associate professor of Japanese at Hope, who shared the story of Hope’s first Japanese students in the 1870s with a particular focus on Kumaji Kimura (Class of 1879), and Margaret Matsumoto, whose father Toru Matsumoto had been ordained in the Reformed Church in America and had been a member of the Meiji Gakuin faculty.

Meiji Gakuin organized celebration events in May, with guests from Hope including President Knapp and his wife Kelly. Meiji Gakuin also commemorated the relationship in its magazine in April and with a website in both Japanese and English.

Meiji Gakuin University is a Christian university with campuses in both Tokyo and Yokohama. Meiji Gakuin traces its origins to the establishment of an English academy in Yokohama in 1863 by American medical missionaries serving through the Presbyterian Church of America.

Hope alumni had been engaged with Meiji Gakuin as missionaries since the early part of the 20th century. One of those alumni, the Rev. Gordon Van Wyk ’41, was among those who played a leadership role in establishing the relationship with Hope while he was on the faculty at Meiji Gakuin (1953-85), where he taught Bible, American literature and history.

Hope’s and Meiji Gakuin’s relationship began in 1965 with a summer program that brought Japanese students to the Hope campus. It became a bilateral exchange in 1980, with Hope students traveling to Japan through a May Term course. The two institutions added long-term study abroad in 1989 and a faculty exchange in 1994, with Hope also hosting a Global Management Seminar for students since 2007 and a Faculty Development Workshop since 2013. Also since 2013, Hope has hosted junior high school students in the summer through a partnership between Meiji Gakuin and Komoro City of Japan.

Hope’s ties to Japan go back nearly a century earlier than the anniversary. At one point in the 19th century, as many as 14 students from Japan were studying at the college. The first two Hope graduates from Japan—who comprised one third of the graduating class in 1879—were Kumaji Kimura and Motoichiro Oghimi, who subsequently attended New Brunswick Theological Seminary and returned to Japan to serve as educators and pastors. Kimura was originally from Komoro City, a connection that helped inspire the 2013 junior high program. Many Hope alumni were involved with Meiji Gakuin itself for decades before 1965.

The 50-year relationship with Meiji Gakuin University is among five important partnerships that Hope has today with universities in Japan, which include Ferris University, Seigakuin University Technos College and Waseda University.

A group of students, seen from behind, are walking along a dirt path through a dense bamboo forest. The bamboo stalks are tall and slender, creating a vertical rhythm. Sunlight filters through the green canopy above. The students are wearing casual clothing and backpacks, suggesting they are on a field trip or excursion.

A moment from the college's May Term in Japan this past spring.

Shigeri Hayashi, a third-year Meiji Gakuin student who is spending 2015-16 at Hope, has made the journey to the college twice through the partnership. "I came here last year in the summer, and was so impressed with the experience that I wanted to take more classes here," she said. "The people were very nice and the professors were very kind, so I decided to come back to study for a year."

A pre-law student, she has valued the chance to compare Japanese and U.S. constitutional law, but she has equally appreciated the opportunity to experience another culture, not as an exercise, but through life, often in ways as everyday as talking late into the night with her roommate, or connecting with other students—not least of all those who are studying Japanese.

"We talk about Japanese culture and American culture," Hayashi said. "And sometimes I help them with Japanese homework and they help me with my American homework."

For Hope senior Tony Byrne of Big Rapids, Michigan, participation in the exchange program might have seemed a foregone conclusion. His mother's family had hosted Meiji Gakuin students in the 1970s and 1980s, positive experiences that were a fond part of family lore.

He notes, though, that he hadn't recalled that history as he began his Hope experience. And so it was coincidental that he enrolled in Japanese courses at Hope as an intriguing way of fulfilling his language requirement, and subsequently found himself encouraged to participate in the May Term by faculty involved.

"At that point I hadn't really thought about studying abroad, but I figured I should have an experience if that was available," he said. "So I went and it was one of the greatest experiences of my life."

The experience was also transformational. Byrne admits that (like many students) he enrolled as a freshman without a clear career path in mind, but the opportunities he's found since have provided direction. He was so inspired by the May Term that he decided to pursue a Japanese studies composite major and, mirroring Hayashi's journey, opted to spend his junior year at Meiji Gakuin.

"The professors there were fantastic," Byrne said. "I think I've worked pretty hard the past few years studying Japanese, but they definitely pushed me further than I thought possible at the time. I definitely owe them a debt of gratitude."

"Not once did I feel like an outsider in the classroom," he said. "That was really nice."

Byrne, who is also majoring in philosophy, is now hoping to return to Japan after graduation, perhaps to teach English.

"I feel really blessed and I'm really thankful for the opportunity to go to Meiji Gakuin," Byrne said. "Just that I came to Hope without any preconception of what I want to do, and I happened to find this language major and happened to meet all these wonderful professors that made me open to the idea of going to this entirely new place, and then going there and opening my eyes in ways I never thought. I have a lot of people to thank for where I'm at."

"I think it's so great that 50 years ago they started this relationship, and it's been maintained," he said.

More about the program is on the college's website, including a link to Meiji Gakuin University's online commemoration of the relationship, which is available in both Japanese and English. hope.edu/meijigakuinanniversary

Not in Stone Alone

The largest and most successful fundraising effort in the college's history, the recently concluded A Greater Hope comprehensive campaign has literally transformed the campus through facilities running from the Haworth Engineering Center at the west to the VandePoel-Heeringa Stadium courts at the east and multiple points in between. The impact, however, has been no less significant beyond bricks and mortar, with major endowment support adding scholarships, endowed professorships and staff positions, and funding for initiatives such as faculty-student collaborative research.

And so the lasting difference can be seen, but importantly it is also being felt, and not only in the day-to-day learning that takes place both on campus and beyond, but through the lives of those who are shaped—and in turn shape others—for the better.

Where Question

Story by Jim McFarlin '74

Like many first-time visitors to Hope, David Brooks was invited to experience a weekday Chapel service one recent Wednesday morning — and came away inspired.

“The students just crammed this place,” marveled Brooks, the renowned conservative columnist for the New York Times, best-selling author, and commentator for the PBS Newshour and NPR’s All Things Considered. He was seated on a front pew in Dimnent Memorial Chapel, where the service had taken place hours earlier. “The scientist who spoke (Dr. Beth Anderson, assistant professor of chemistry and Towsley Research Scholar) gave a sensational talk about wonder. You know, science and faith are not always well integrated, but she certainly integrated it super well.

“I just love the spirit of the place, the spiritual intensity. The music was good, and then later we got to meet the chaplains and they were just so warm. I was really struck by how the faculty and the administration think about the entire life, not just the brain.”

Unlike many first-time guests, Brooks left not only with a powerful impression, but also with an honorary doctorate degree in humane letters. He was the featured speaker for the college’s fall Presidential Colloquium, a semiannual series established during the inaugural year of Hope president Dr. John C. Knapp in 2013 that brings some of the world’s most illustrious thinkers to campus to share their insights on academia and global civic engagement. (“It’s a pleasure to be a Flying Dutchman,” Brooks declared after the honorary degree was bestowed. “I first came here 12 hours ago.”)

The theme of the Sept. 30 event was “The Value and Relevance of a Faith-Based, Liberal Arts Education in the 21st Century.”

“We have continued to stay steadfast in our belief that the American liberal arts model is a great way to educate students, and perhaps more relevant today than it has ever been,” Dr. Knapp said. “And at a college like Hope with a Christian mission, we see it as an important part of our work to help students answer the Big Questions: Who am I? Who is God? What is the meaning of life? In this 150th year at Hope College, we recognize our approach to education is adding tremendous value to our students as they prepare for life in an increasingly complex global society.”

To underscore that belief, the colloquium included an afternoon panel discussion with Dr. Knapp and the presidents of three other faith-rooted liberal arts institutions: Dr. Mary Dana Hinton of the College of Saint Benedict in St. Joseph, Minnesota; Dr. Robin Baker of George Fox University in Newberg, Oregon, and Dr. Michael Le Roy of Calvin College in Grand Rapids,

the Big s Matter

"I teach at a secular university and visit a lot of them, and it's possible for students to go through four years without spending a lot of time learning about themselves, or thinking about the nature of their soul. At a faith-based institution, that almost never happens. It's discussed late night in the dorms, over the lunch table. It's just on the mind, and talked about."

~David Brooks

Michigan. "The liberal arts liberate us to think broadly, to engage with the world," said Dr. Hinton. "But our faith-based foundation challenges us to say, 'You're liberated in service to what?' We are called to use our liberal arts education in service of the world around us."

Brooks' daylong visit to Hope, which included interactions with students, faculty, administrators and community members leading up to his evening keynote address, was well timed, as he is seeking answers to Big Questions himself. His fourth and latest book The Road to Character (Random House), published in April, finds the author scrutinizing the biographies of such historical figures as Dwight Eisenhower, Saint Augustine, Catholic social activist Dorothy Day and Victorian novelist George Eliot as exemplars of virtues he can apply to his own life.

"I have to confess, I hadn't looked at the book for a few months so I went through it as sort of a refresher," Brooks said. "I remember thinking to myself, 'You haven't really been living up to this!' So it's a constant reminder. The people I wrote about in the book, they set a standard of behavior that you're probably not going to live up to, but you hope you get a little closer. I do think having the right high standards is the first prominent step.

"You're not going to become a saint by reading a book, or writing one, but you can get some of the knowledge and wisdom that have accumulated over the ages," he said.

Brooks, 54, has been a columnist for the Times since 2003. "When you're beginning your career, you're kind of the plucky outsider," he reflects. "But when you reach what I consider the pinnacle, people are rooting for you to fail." In addition to his other media pursuits, he is a lecturer at Yale University and has taught a course on "philosophical humility."

"That was sort of the joke, a New York Times columnist teaching Yale students about humility," he said, laughing. "It was really some of the preparatory thinking that turned into the book. It was to argue against a culture of narcissism, which I think is sweeping the country."

In his book, Brooks calls it the culture of "The Big Me." "I teach at a secular university and visit a lot of them, and it's possible for students to go through four years without spending a lot of time learning about themselves, or thinking about the nature of their soul," he said. "At a faith-based institution, that almost never happens. It's discussed late night in the dorms, over the lunch table. It's just on the mind, and talked about."

Research in Mexico

By Greg Chandler

If the time that Hope faculty mentor Dr. Maria Claudia André and her students spent in Mexico City this summer had done nothing more than present an opportunity to experience the community and its culture, the resulting lessons would have been significant.

Add into the mix a chance to engage in original research as part of a multi-institutional effort that will provide a resource for people around the world for years to come? Priceless.

Dr. André, who is a professor of Spanish, is involving Hope students in an ongoing research project through the Great Lakes Colleges Association (GLCA). During the summer, Dr. André and two students, senior Meghan Loree of Spring Lake, Michigan, and Regina Sánchez-González '15 of San Francisco, California, spent three weeks in Mexico City, conducting research on the contributions of artists who were influential in shaping Mexican society following that country's revolution in the early 20th century.

Along the way, they met people who knew the artists and gained a greater appreciation not only for their art, but the culture they represented.

"Imagine you're studying the work of someone you admire and you spend many days reading and learning, and then you get to meet people who were participants in this whole movement," Dr. André said. "If you were a rock musician, it would be like meeting Mick Jagger."

The Hope research is tied to an ambitious overall initiative, titled "Mapping the Megalopolis: Making an atlas of Mexico City." The project involves researchers from Hope and six other member colleges of the GLCA, a consortium of private liberal arts institutions in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Much of Dr. André's research centered on the role of muralism—a form of artwork that became synonymous with Mexican culture in the wake of the revolution, led by the famed artist Diego Rivera. Not only did the Hope researchers visit museums where work by Rivera and other artists was featured, but they

Dr. André says that at the time, illiteracy in Mexico was at a very high level, and muralism was a perfect form for introducing art and modernity to the people of that country. "You have lots of space on a wall. If you bring art to the streets, then people are bound to see it," she said.

The researchers also studied the development of stridentism, another form of artistic and literary avant-garde movement that sought to challenge the prevailing nationalism and to initiate a serious critical inquiry into the traditional ways of thinking about art and culture in the region.

Highlights also included numerous visits to Mexico City's museums, as well as interviews with artists who knew Rivera, Kahlo and other artists tied to that post-revolutionary period. Dr. André recalls a visit to one particular national archive that proved to be a highlight of the experience.

"We told the people at the museum we were conducting research on Rivera.

They had tons of letters and photos and images and all sorts of documents tied to him. We hit the jackpot," Dr. André said.

Loree recalled meeting two artists who had been apprentices under Rivera and Kahlo, and says the learning opportunity was life-changing.

"I was blown away by the amount of knowledge they had about these artists from having worked under them," she said. "They had pictures around their house. One of the artists would say, 'This is a sketch Diego Rivera met people who knew both Rivera and his wife, the prominent feminist artist Frida Kahlo.

"Muralism became the official art and cultural movement for the expression and recognition of the Mexican people and their heritage. For its didactic nature, muralism was the perfect medium to reinvent the country's national history as well as a resource for the construction of a modern Mexican culture, one that would heal the divisions that had not been solved by politics," Dr. André said.

made for me.' It was part of their life, seeing the focus of artwork in their home."

For Sánchez-González, who grew up in Mexico, the research project began months before the visit to Mexico City, as she took an independent study course with Dr. André.

"It's one thing to sit in a library and do research. It's another thing to be immersed in the culture, the people, the setting, and having it all come to life," Sánchez-González said. "We had the space to talk about these artists, what they were like as people. It was an amazing experience."

The researchers not only learned about the artists, but the interdisciplinary context in which that art form flourished, according to Dr. André.

"You have art, you have history, you have culture, you have politics, you have literature. You have a whole philosophical and interdisciplinary ideology behind this. You're not just learning about one culture and its people, but you're growing as an individual," she said.

Dr. André is currently collaborating with another Hope student, junior Taylor Mills of Burlington, Vermont, on putting the research information into a digital format. The two attended a conference on the use of digital media in the liberal arts in late summer at Hamilton College in New York. A composite moral philosophy and psychology major at Hope, Mills says working on this initiative with Dr. André encompasses all of what a liberal arts education should be.

"Not only has it augmented my academic and technological abilities, but also I have developed wonderful relationships. Professor André has become a sensational mentor and good friend through this project and the week-long conference we attended," she said.

The work of Dr. André and the other GLCA researchers will be going into a digital map as well as a book, and many of the research materials may also end up as a part of a course on Mexico that could be taught on GLCA campuses, or possibly even through some type of distance learning program.

"Each of us will create a unit and hopefully team-teach a class. For example, the professor from DePauw will allow me to use his research material and his teaching units on the urban aspect of Mexico City, and I will grant him access to my research and teaching units on Mexican avant-garde movements," Dr. André said.

In the end, the research project in Mexico gave Dr. André and her students the opportunity to experience the artists and the history of that era first-hand. And to her, there's nothing better.

"It's like being a reporter. I always wanted to be a reporter. You go to the source. What better research than to go to the source?"

"It's one thing to sit in a library and do research. It's another thing to be immersed in the culture, the people, the setting, and having it all come to life. We had the space to talk about these artists, what they were like as people. It was an amazing experience."

ARTIFACTS AMONG US

Photographer Steve Nelson of the art faculty has long been interested in the relationship between industry, community and nature in the context of past and present, a fascination that stems from his exploration of an abandoned sand-mining facility while growing up in Muskegon, Michigan.

“My photographs question the illusion of purpose and function,” said Professor Nelson, an associate professor of art who has taught at Hope since 1989. “What was the function of these spaces? What will that function be in the future? Will the spaces ever find a function, or will they continue to decline and ultimately face demolition?”

As an undergraduate, he photographed artisans in Guatemala who found their traditional hand-crafting being replaced by mass-produced goods. More recently, he has chronicled ruined abbeys in England (“communities of industry in addition to serving a religious function”) and abandoned industrial facilities in rural Michigan that provide a relatively modern counterpart to the centuries-old sites on the other side of the Atlantic.

His latest study has focused on an abandoned paper mill in Plainwell, Michigan. His exploration, After Operations, was displayed in the mill itself in an exhibit that ran this summer along with Exposure Pathways, a sculpture installation by artist Sarah Lindley of Kalamazoo College, in conjunction with a traveling Smithsonian exhibition, The Way We Worked.

After Operations will soon be traveling, beginning with Kendall College of Art and Design in Grand Rapids, Michigan, this spring. Professor Nelson hopes that his art facilitates discussion as the people of the present navigate the world in which they find themselves and the relics of the past.

“I’m interested in being part of a larger dialogue with other scholars and artists in discussing issues of industry and community and where they cross over,” he said. “I hope that the questions raised through the photographs contribute to the conversation about purpose and function and our perceptions of the past, present and future conditions.”

More about Professor Nelson and his work is available online at stevenelsonphotography.com.

“In one case you see a crossword puzzle book that was left in the middle. The site was in operation for 100 years. People walked away and nature relatively immediately began to take over.”

“I want to bring objects from a distance into proximity so that you can have a greater appreciation for function and form and how they have meaning for our existence even though they’re abandoned.”

“The landscape here is actually entering the space. You have this 19th-century architecture that’s allowing the landscape to exist.”

“I use color and black-and-white for different reasons. The black-and-white seems more monolithic and monumental, and the color seems to be more about the immediacy and in the moment.”

“My parents expect the best out of all of us (brothers). I’m grateful that they allowed me to be the first in the family to try something different. Diving was something no one else did and I liked the uniqueness of it.”

Jean Luc Miralda '17
Tegucigalpa, Honduras

*Far from Home,

By Eva Dean Folkert '83

Growing up in a country where soccer is king and almost every other athletic activity is treated like the court jester, Hope College junior Jean Luc Miralda found a sport that fit his gregarious, expressive personality.

Actually, it would be more appropriate to say the sport found him.

In Honduras, the “beautiful game” captivates the nation like no other. Soccer reigns glorious in Honduran hearts and minds, and Miralda is no exception. He loves the sport like any fanatic should. Eats up every bit of news about his national team. Can kick around the soccer ball with above-average aplomb.

But like any good court jester playing beside his majesty, Miralda uses his own brand of individuality to create performances of his choosing. Guided into swimming by his parents at the age of two, the Honduran happened upon his eventual chosen sport – diving – out of sheer boredom and unmitigated magnetism. There is simply no better way to explain it.

Now, the once accidental diver is a two-time All-Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association (MIAA) athlete, a four-time Hope College record-holder, and a 2016 Rio Olympics hopeful. Not bad for a court jester who gave the king the boot.

“I was 10 years-old,” Miralda begins to retell his aquatic tale, “and one day I was getting bored at swimming practice, doing the same thing in the pool every day, down and back, down and back. So, I just started doing backflips off the pool deck. The national diving coach saw me, and he came up to me and said, ‘Boy, you got talent. You want to be a diver?’”

The boy did, but he had to get permission from his parents first. All three of his brothers swam, so Miralda was expected to swim, too. Yet, his parents—Wilmer Miralda, a civil engineer, and Ivonne Nasser, a cosmetologist—knew they had free spirit in their own gene pool. After some serious household debate and after winning two gold medals in Latin American youth competitions a year after he started, Miralda was hooked on diving and his parents approved... but with two stipulations: Work hard in school, too, and aim high.

“My parents expect the best out of all of us (brothers)” Miralda says, who graduated from the American School of Tegucigalpa, Honduras’ capital. “I’m grateful that they allowed me to be the first in the family to try something different. Diving was something no one else did and I liked the uniqueness of it. I like to follow my own path. I guess it’s just who I am.”

His Hope diving coach, Zack Golin, likes who Miralda is, too: that fun guy who lightens up van rides and the pool deck with his idiosyncratic humor, and that passionate diver who wants to make his parents, school, and country proud. When Miralda arrived at Hope and stepped his bouncing feet onto the fiberglass diving boards in Hope’s Kresge Natatorium, Golin saw a raw set of skills but excellent mechanics. Old wooden diving boards were all Miralda had to train on in Honduras, and they limited his flight time and dive difficulty. But after two seasons at Hope, Miralda’s scores started to soar (he was one position away from making the NCAA Division III national meet last year) while his massively extroverted and joyful personality remained grounded.

“Jean Luc makes his presence known on the pool deck and it’s amazing to see how much our divers, and even competitors, lighten up when he is cracking jokes and trying to make friends with everyone he sees,” says Golin. “The fun spirit and passion that we bring into the pool is contagious and Jean Luc is a major contributor to that. Sometimes I swear he knows every diver in the country.”

With his third Hope diving season just barely underway, Miralda has set three goals that could be attained within the next six months: win the MIAA league meet, qualify for the NCAA Division III national meet, and receive an invitation to represent Honduras at the 2016 Olympics in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Admittedly, the first two are realistically within Miralda’s reach; the third is a bit tenuous, especially after a trying experience while diving in an outdoor pool and El Nino winds at the Central American and Caribbean Games in Veracruz, Mexico, a year ago. There, at a major Olympic qualifier, he finished 11th and 12th on the one- and three-meter boards, respectively. He needed to finish in the top three for automatic selection, but he will get another opportunity to qualify at the upcoming FINA Diving World Series.

Like his entry into diving, Miralda found Hope by accident, too. And, once again, he cut another trail away from family norms. Each of his brothers is a Worcester (Massachusetts) Polytechnic University alum or student, and each is an engineer. The third-oldest Miralda “stumbled upon” Hope through the common application process, and, now as a communication major and leadership minor, is currently, and appropriately, researching comparative, cross-cultural happiness depicted in photos and narrative responses with Dr. Dede Johnston, professor of communication. After he graduates, Miralda wants to work as a leader in mentorship programs for youth. That makes perfect sense, for this young man of influence is also a leader in Hope’s Student Congress and Latin Student Organization as well as the initiator of a proposed trustee mentor program with Dean Richard Frost.

“Jean Luc is incredibly engaging and very unafraid. His self-confidence is one of his greatest assets,” says Ernesto Villarreal, Hope’s assistant director of multicultural education. “He has travelled so far from home and has grabbed the proverbial bull by the horns. And to his credit, he has found people to walk alongside him.”

“Coming to Hope was the best decision I could have made,” declares Miralda. “I never thought I’d love a place as much as I love Hope or as much as I loved home. I’m in a great community and have an awesome host family. My team is super supportive. I’m comfortable being exactly who I am here. I don’t feel like an outsider or another number. I am Jean Luc bringing new ideas and making a difference.”

PAST. PRESENT. FUTURE. TOGETHER.

A GREATER PURPOSE

By Chris Lewis '09

Since graduating from Hope, Vidhan Rana '08 has traveled thousands of miles away from the campus to fulfill his vocation in Nepal, the country in which he was born and raised. Yet, despite his distance from the college, his experiences at Hope remain ingrained in him daily, as he has been inspired to live a life of service that is dedicated to enriching others' lives—just as Hope enriched his.

With this commitment to service in mind, he has established Biruwa Ventures, an organization based in Kathmandu, which offers business consulting, mentoring and seed capital to start-ups and growth-phase companies. In addition, he is passionate about education. In fact, ever since he was a Hope student, he has volunteered on behalf of an effort that supports schools across Nepal, an initiative that became critical in the wake of the multiple earthquakes that have struck the nation since April.

Rana's journey to Hope, and eventual discovery of a service-oriented life, began during his senior year at Budhanikantha School, when he learned about the college from Utsab Khadka '06 and Shova KC '07, recent graduates of the high school who were also Hope students. He liked what he learned about Hope, and was intrigued by the concept of studying abroad, due to the political turmoil that was occurring in Nepal at the time, as the country was in the midst of a decade-long civil war.

After moving to Holland, he committed his time and talents to academic work and campus life, and became acclimated to American culture as he pursued a degree in business management and economics; was accepted as a member of the Baker Scholars, an honors program for economics, management and accounting students; and participated in international education events like "IMAGES: A Reflection of Cultures."

He also spoke with friends who were involved in service-focused activities like mission trips. Before long, he realized just how meaningful a life of selflessness could be.

"I began to think about how I could help Nepal, so the career I chose is a result of the inspiration I received at Hope," Rana said. "Without this inspiration for service, I would have never returned to Nepal."

An alumnus brings Hope to Nepal

He continued, "There is a greater purpose to life than just caring for yourself. If there is any way I can contribute towards helping other people improve their lives, I feel I should do something about it."

In the meantime, during the first semester of his junior year, a monumental event transpired: the Comprehensive Peace Accord was signed in November 2006 between the Nepali government and the Unified Communist Party of Nepal, thereby ending the civil war.

"When the peace treaty was signed, I immediately began to make plans to move back to Nepal after my graduation from Hope," Rana said. "And I started to look into ways I could contribute towards the development of the country."

He soon learned about the Santi School Project, a nonprofit organization that was building a school in Ramche, a remote village east of Kathmandu. After talking to the nonprofit's founder, Christopher Heun, on Skype, Rana pledged to raise $5,000 for the school. He spoke to friends, faculty and staff members at Hope about the cause and even held a fundraiser at Holland's Third Reformed Church. Ultimately, he surpassed his goals and raised more than $10,000.

Rana has been actively engaged with the organization ever since, as he has helped a variety of other schools improve their infrastructures as well.

"Through our experiences in Ramche, we realized that there are many government schools in Nepal that need outside help, as the government's allocated budget is barely high enough for them to operate," Rana said.

The Santi School Project's efforts focus especially on offering reconstruction and infrastructure support—mainly to government and community-owned primary schools—an emphasis that became even more crucial on April 25 of this year, when a 7.8-magnitude earthquake struck Kathmandu and its surrounding areas. According to the United Nations, 870,000 school children were directly affected by the devastation, as nearly 5,000 schools were completely destroyed and more than 16,000 schools were damaged and left unsafe.

Since then, more than 400 aftershocks have occurred, including an earthquake that measured 6.9 on the Richter scale on May 12. Economic expenditures are currently estimated at more than $5 billion—and are steadily rising.

"The school we originally built, along with four other schools we reconstructed nearby, were severely damaged," Rana said. "These schools will now need to be rebuilt. We have raised more than $200,000 so far to rebuild around 20 schools in all."

It's an effort that has even extended back, appropriately, to Hope. To help Rana raise further funds for the Santi School Project, Shubham Sapkota '15, a native of Nepal who is currently studying at the University of Denver (Colorado), and Amy Otis-De Grau '96, director of international education, established a framework for fundraising events on Hope's campus.

Although Sapkota has never met Rana, he reached out to him after the earthquakes to see how he could help.

"I had just finished college and I was still in the Holland area, so it was a perfect time for me to coordinate efforts from various Hope connections," Sapkota explained. "I basically acted as a bridge between Hope's international education department and Vidhan's efforts for earthquake relief."

In November, international education's cross-cultural showcase, "IMAGES: A Reflection of Cultures," featured the Santi School Project in a five-minute presentation, following in suit with previous showcases that have donated to causes such as typhoon relief in the Philippines and earthquake relief in Japan and Pakistan. The department's International Food Fair will also highlight the nonprofit in February.

The connections are certainly meaningful to Rana, as they provide a fitting link to his own experiences on campus, which he never would have imagined 10 years ago.

"Some of my fondest memories from Hope are of rehearsals and the 'IMAGES' shows, as well as the Nepali cuisine I cooked during the International Food Fair," Rana said. "Aside from making my transition into a completely new environment as smooth as possible, the international education department also opened my eyes to different cultures and perspectives. It helped me expand my knowledge so that I became a more open and accepting person."

ALUMNI PROFILE

A life-long dream of professionally performing music and touring has become reality for Eve Panning '15, who has been selected to join the prestigious string group Barrage 8. A recent Hope College graduate, Panning double majored in violin performance and instrumental music education.

Panning originally came to Hope to study in the pre-veterinary program. However, she quickly became involved in different ensembles like the Symphonette and Jazz Arts Collective, which exposed her to a variety of performance settings.

"I knew Hope had a fantastic violin professor and a great music department where I could explore different options and get the individual attention that wouldn't be possible in a conservatory," Panning said.

Panning began playing the violin at age six and invested in classical violin lessons at Indiana University. With the guidance of mentors and teachers, she continued to study classical violin and fiddling, playing weddings and musical festivals. Panning cites these experiences — as well as playing music with her family — as the encouragement and opportunity she needed to experiment with different genres, learn to play by ear and improvise.

While cultivating her musical skills and knowledge through the music department at Hope, Panning found a mentor in Dr. Mihai Craioveanu, a professor of violin.

"Eve and I had many conversations about her future professional plans and aspirations. She conveyed to me her passion for performance and touring," Dr. Craioveanu said.

In March 2015, Dr. Craioveanu received word of national auditions for Barrage 8 and recognized a perfect fit for Panning. Realistically aware of the competitive process she was embarking on, Panning submitted her portfolio to the search committee. Weeks later she was invited for a live audition in Chicago. After her audition, she was invited to join Barrage 8.

"Following the outcome of the selection process, the national search committee told me how impressed they were with Eve's overall application and audition. She was an ideal candidate," Dr. Craioveanu said.

Both Panning and Dr. Craioveanu credit the college's music department with the preparation it provided.

"At Hope, Panning was able and encouraged to explore various aspects of music. She benefited from many performing opportunities which at larger universities are normally reserved for graduate programs," Dr. Craioveanu said.

Panning has relocated to Miami and began rehearsing with the rest of the Barrage 8 cast in September. While she knows the touring schedule will be rigorous, Panning is thrilled to travel to different countries while doing what she loves.

"It was a real pleasure working with Eve; she has a bright future ahead. Her recent accomplishment marks a very important step in her professional journey," Dr. Craioveanu said.

Originally based out of Calgary, Canada, Barrage is a violin-based, modern world beat ensemble. With a blend of contemporary string arrangements and high-energy choreography, Barrage has toured in over 27 countries since 1996. They have since rebranded as Barrage 8 and moved headquarters to Florida, all the while keeping the same performance energy and musical diversity. A global tour will begin in January 2016.

Violin Major to Tour the Globe with High-Energy Ensemble

By Emilie DeFrain '15

As a 23-year-old and recent Hope graduate working for my alma mater, I anxiously awaited my first official “alumni visit.” The date was October 9, 2006 and the place was a popular bohemian hangout, the Rose Café, in Venice (think L.A. beaches and boardwalks, not grand Italian canals and mazelike streets). I was in California for a Hope event and had time for a quick breakfast appointment before flights back to a much colder Michigan. My goal was to meet and thank a 1984 alumna who had been supporting the Hope Fund consistently since graduation. I didn’t know then that I would create a meaningful connection with an amazing person I have the pleasure of working with still today.

Alumni Association President Vicki Brunn '84 and Scott Travis '06 en route to the Alumni Board's meeting in October.

The typical alumni biography for Vicki Brunn '84 is impressive enough. She has been senior counsel at Amgen, a biotechnology company, since 2007. She completed a master's degree in child development at University of California-Davis in 1988, and a law degree at Loyola in 2004. Her career experience has included serving as a senior child life specialist at UCI Medical Center; as coordinator of child life services at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center; and as an attorney with two different firms. She has provided pro-bono public counsel and is a past vice president of the board of directors of the Starlight Children's Foundation. At Hope she majored in psychology and minored in economics. She was involved as a student with the Alpha Gamma Phi sorority, Nykerk, the Anchor newspaper and the pep band.

However, typical biographical summaries rarely tell the whole story. When I met with Vicki almost a decade ago she shared that she would like to get more involved at Hope. So she did. In 2011 she joined the Alumni Association Board of Directors. She also shared that someday she would like to start an endowment. So she did. In 2012 she established the Teresa Emeline Brunn Psychology Fund, providing resources that empower Hope students to explore foster care and children's advocacy.

At one point, she decided she would like to summit Mount Kilimanjaro. So, 19,341 feet later, she did. Later, she decided that she would like to foster elephants. So, through the David Sheldrick Wildlife Trust, she did. Ishanga and Kibo are now rescued and protected in Kenya thanks to her philanthropy.

This year, she was asked to serve as president of the Hope College Alumni Association. We're glad she agreed to do that, too.

WINDOW TO HOPE'S HISTORY

The annual Student Activities Fair provided an apt prelude to the groundbreaking for the Jim and Martie Bultman Student Center on Monday, Aug. 30. Hope selected a similarly fitting occasion, immediately following the Homecoming Parade, to inaugurate construction of its predecessor, the DeWitt Student and Cultural Center, on Saturday, Oct. 19, 1968. Dedicated on Oct. 23, 1971, DeWitt was built primarily as a space for students, but of necessity became an administrative hub when the April 1980 burning of Van Raalte Hall displaced numerous college offices that had no place else to go. While DeWitt continued to house student organizations (as well as the Department of Theatre, Kletz and later the bookstore), the new center, scheduled for completion in 2017, will realize a long-awaited return to a cherished vision. Pictured holding the shovel at center during the 1968 ceremony are Ron Hook '69 and Shirley Lawrence '69, Student Senate president and vice president respectively; they are flanked by brothers Richard DeWitt '31 and Jack DeWitt '32, who made a major gift on behalf of the project.

Don DeKraker '40 has relocated to Tinley Park, Illinois, to be closer to his family, which includes two daughters, five grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. His daughter reports that it is nice to have him nearby for visits and celebrations, reliving great memories and making new ones. He was honored at a Fourth of July parade this year for his World War II Air Force heroics. He enjoys his crossword and word search games daily and is always ready for bingo.

Arthur "Bud" Van Eck '48 celebrated his 90th birthday with 144 family and friends from all over the U.S. on Tuesday, June 2. He flew to Washington, D.C., on an honor flight for World War II veterans. His own community of Fife Lake, Michigan, honored him by selecting him as grand marshal of the Fourth of July parade. His wife, Beatrice VanHeest '53 VanEck, joined him.

50s

Myron "Mike" Van Ark '51 and Mae Van Ark celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary on August 24. Norman Gysbers '54 of Columbia, Missouri, retired from the department of educational, school and counseling psychology at the University of Missouri, on Monday, Aug. 31, after 52 years of service. Upon retirement he was awarded the title curators' professor emeritus.

Bill Heydorn '55 of Belvedere Tiburon, California, was a member of a team invited by a hospital in Taiwan that sought to maintain accreditation by Joint Commission International.

Jack Faber '59 retired at the end of May from practicing dentistry for five decades in his hometown of Zeeland, Michigan. In 1961 he married Judy Eastman '61 and graduated from the University of Michigan Dental School in 1963. 60s

George Bitner '60 of Spring Lake, Michigan, coached the Spring Lake High School girls golf team to its second consecutive Division 3 state championship this fall. The team won by 70 strokes and the best score in any division, and five golfers received state awards (team member Anna Kramer, who was the Division 3 individual medalist, is the younger sister of Hope freshman golfer Ben Kramer). George, who has been coaching for more than 50 years, started the school's girls golf program in 1980.

Kathryn Kurth '60 Scudder of Dearborn, Michigan, released her second book, Prayer Thoughts for Every Day. It consists of a Bible quotation and prayer for each day of the year.

L. William Kuypers '61 reports that it is hard to imagine that 50 years ago this summer he was discharged from the U.S. Marine Corps and their prestigious band, The President's Own. At the band's alumni reunion, he performed in concerts on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 14–15 in Washington, D.C. The concerts were performed at the West Terrace of the Capitol and the Sylvan Theater at the base of the Washington Monument. They were lead by former leaders and included spirited renditions The Marines' Hymn, The Stars and Stripes Forever and other concert favorites. The band's alumni had many memories to share. Everything from the Kennedy funeral to unexpected situations at the White House with various presidents and grueling domestic concert tours was rehearsed and perhaps embellished. He began his illustrious career as a French horn player with the band after graduation. Following that four-year enlistment, he was a member of the National Symphony for another four years. His 38-year tenure with the New York Philharmonic began subsequently. Marietta Workman '63 Driscoll of Brighton, Michigan, moved this summer to be closer to children and grandchildren.

Russ Harmsen '63 and his wife, Margo Harmsen, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in March with a tour of Europe in May.

A New Generation

Hope celebrates every student, whether the first in the family to attend or the 70th, but it says something important about the college that each year some 100-plus members of the newest class have ancestral ties, reflecting, it must be fair to say, that past experience was positive. Who, after all, would want anything less for their child or grandchild (or great-grandchild...)?

In this sesquicentennial year, 103 members of the freshman Class of 2019 have direct family connections that collectively span nearly the whole of the college's history. Pictured from left to right are several of this year's Third-, Fourth- and Fifth-Generational New Students: Row 1: Mackenzie

Mitchell (third), Monika DeWitt (third), Abigail Brinks (third), Kirsten Van Wieren (third), Carolyn Williams (third); Row 2: Jack Veld (fourth), Megan Clark (third), Jessica Drew (fourth), Mackenzie Greendyke (third), Allie Donaldson (fourth), Katarina Zomer (third), Emily Hofmeyer (third), Annie Veld (fourth); Row 3: Ben Stryker (fourth), Zachary Buys (fourth), Seth DeWitt (fourth), Colin Baron (third), Abigail Cole (fifth), Madison Lynema (third), Elizabeth Fris (fifth), Tessa De Young (third).

The full list of all of this year's Generational New Students, and their Hope ancestry, is available online.

Most surprising, and overwhelming in a good way, was the outpouring of support from two communities (Spring Lake, where she teaches, and North Muskegon where her husband Mike Schanhals '92 teaches) and Hope College, where Mike is the varsity lacrosse coach. The prayers and letters meant the world to her. The seniors from the Hope men's lacrosse team visited, and the men's and women's teams sent cookies, gas cards and a great group picture. Kevin '99 and Tina Gill '99 DeKam along with Drew '99 and Arika Weckwert '99 Roelofs and their families returned home this past year after serving two years as administrators at The Esther School in Zambia, Africa, a Christian day school founded by the GEMS organization. The school is the first of its kind in the local village and surrounding area, as parents pay no school fees, but volunteer on the school campus in an active and structured P.T.O. program. The school opened its doors for the first time in the Fall of 2012 and is currently in its fourth year, serving more than 120 students each day, with an additional class being added each year through grade 12. Students come from very rural, impoverished areas and not only receive two meals each day while at school, but are also given a well-rounded, Christian education in a classroom led by both a Zambian and North American teacher. The DeKams and Roelofs had the task of initially opening and managing the school, as well as establishing connections within the local community, while also sharing their faith through their work and relationships. They were amazed to see a community beginning to transform through the love of Christ and the gift of education. While there, both families also expanded by way of adoption; the DeKams adopting their daughter, Teya Grace, and the Roelofs adopting twins, Michael Mulenga and Faith Beauty.

ABIDING HOPE

A solitary figure passes through a Hope campus that lies quiescent beneath a soft blanket of snow, the cathedral-like frame created by the towering trees that stand vigil in the foreground echoed by the soaring buttresses and windows of the chapel beyond. This particular moment is in one sense literally timeless, the image itself undated in the collections of the Joint Archives of Holland. And although the scene is not quite anywhen (it exists sometime between the completion of Dimnent in 1929 and the 2008-09 renovation of Graves Hall), barring familiarity with some subtle cues it could be from seven years ago or 70, abiding Hope in the season of Hope eternal.
